Frequently Asked Questions

- What is the job outlook for environmental engineers? In 2012, CNN Money ranked environmental engineering in the top 20 for jobs with the fastest growth potential. They listed a median pay of $82,300 for a graduate with two years experience.
- What do environmental engineers do? Environmental engineers design processes and conduct analyses to protect public health and the environment. According to the American Academy of Environmental Engineers, the major areas include air pollution control, industrial hygiene, radiation protection, hazardous waste management, toxic materials control, water supply, wastewater management, storm water management, solid waste disposal, public health and land management.
- Is this program focused on wastewater? No! One of the 18 courses in the major covers wastewater. The curriculum is designed to give graduates sufficient breath to practice environmental engineering at the entry level and attend virtually any environmental engineering graduate program.
- My roommate's major has 40 courses, why does this one have 44? The environmental engineering major is ABET accredited. Forty-three courses plus a one-credit seminar are needed to provide sufficient depth in engineering to maintain accreditation.
- Why should I join a major that is ABET accredited? ABET accreditation puts our graduates on the easiest path to become licensed engineers. Because practicing environmental engineers are professionals who protect public health, similar to physicians, we must be licensed.
- Is a 44 course major too intense for a corps squad athlete? No. We've had corps squad athletes, senior leaders in the Corps and the occasional double major.
